Cheryl Turpin has spent almost three decades as a high school science teacher making a difference in the lives of her students. Now she is running to make a difference for Virginia Beach in the Virginia Senate.

As a science teacher at Cox, Princess Anne, and Tallwood High Schools, Delegate Turpin has strong ties across Virginia Beach's 7th Senate District.

Delegate Turpin currently represents Virginia Beach in the 85th District of the Virginia House of Delegates. She has played a key role in bringing Medicaid Expansion to Virginia, increasing teacher pay, and giving struggling schools the resources they need. As a State Senator, she will keep fighting for education, healthcare and keeping our air and water clean.

Sister District endorsed Cheryl in 2017 where she defeated incumbent Rocky Holcomb (R) in the Virginia House of Delegates District 87 election.

ON THE ISSUES:

Education

Cheryl Turpin is running to make a difference for our community – as she's always done for her students. Turpin is a local public-school science teacher and state delegate. As senator, she will work to improve our public schools and invest in job training programs so students are trained for good paying jobs in our area.

Expansion

Turpin believes everyone should be able to afford to see a doctor when they're sick. She helped bring Medicaid Expansion to Virginia. Now, hundreds of thousands more Virginians have access to affordable healthcare, including veterans, children, and working families who fall through the cracks.

Guns

Cheryl Turpin knows that our leaders in Richmond can do more to keep our communities and families safe. That's why she supports common-sense reforms like expanding background checks to keep weapons away from the dangerously mentally ill and domestic abusers.

ERA

As the mother of two daughters, Turpin prioritizes equality. She stood up for the Equal Rights Amendment and believes women should receive equal pay for equal work. Turpin believes men and women are equal and won't stop working until our state and U-S Constitution say so.

Choice

Turpin will stand up to reckless politicians who support forced trans-vaginal exams or want to turn away federal tax dollars that help get important healthcare to women, like cancer screenings and affordable birth control. Turpin trusts Virginia women to make their own healthcare decisions.

ABOUT THE STATE

General Demographics

- Virginia is the 12th-most populous state, with over 8 million residents.
- Virginia's non-white citizens represented 38% of the population in 2017, up from 22% in 1990.
- As of 2015, the non-white voter population was 28%, suggesting that people of color are a growing segment of the general population but not growing as fast in the voting population.
- In the last four presidential elections, voter turnout has been greater than 70%. But in the last 4 elections held in the year just prior to the presidential election (which would be a predictor for 2019), turnout has hovered around 30%.
- Turnout among younger voters (18-29 years old) has steadily increased from 17% in 2009 to 26% in 2013 to 34% in 2017. This segment of the population voted heavily Democratic in 2017 --almost 70/30.
- The Commonwealth has elected Democratic governors in four out of the last five gubernatorial elections, and has not voted for a Republican President since 2004.

District Lines

District lines for Congress and state legislature are drawn by the General Assembly (state legislature). There is a bipartisan advisory commission, but the General Assembly is not required to take their recommendations. The governor has veto power over district lines.

The Commonwealth's district boundaries have been a hot topic of conversation in past years. Both Congressional and state legislative district lines in Virginia have been held unconstitutional by federal courts due to racial gerrymandering. Congressional districts were redrawn by court order in 2016, which increased Democratic representation. Currently, a number of districts in the lower chamber are the subject of ongoing litigation, which is currently being heard by the Supreme Court. The new maps for these lower chamber districts will be used in the 2019 general election unless the Supreme Court overturns the new maps. That decision is due over the summer. The redrawn districts (which more accurately reflect the population) lean more Democratic.

Citizens' groups in Virginia have been working to establish fairer districting processes, including pushing for a nonpartisan redistricting commission. In 2019, the General Assembly approved the "first read" of a constitutional amendment to create an advisory commission for Congressional and state legislative lines. The next step would be for the General Assembly to pass an identical resolution during the next legislative session – after the 2019 election. Then the measure would go onto the ballot in November 2020, at which point Virginians could vote to approve the independent commission.

Voter Suppression

Virginia currently has a voter ID law, passed by its Republican state legislature and governor in 2013. In 2016, the Fourth Circuit of Appeals upheld the Virginia Voter ID law, after a suit alleging it violated the 1965 Voting Rights Act. In addition, Virginia's GOP has made it more difficult to register people to vote. In particular, third-party voter registration requires groups receiving 25 or more registration forms to register with the state. Further, Virginia uses both the controversial Crosscheck and ERIC programs to determine if there are duplicate voter registrations.

Virginia Senate District 7

ABOUT THE STATE

Current State Legislature

Virginia is currently under a divided government: the governor is a Democrat, while Republicans control both chambers of the legislature by an extremely narrow margin—just two seats each. The entire Virginia General Assembly is up for election in 2019, and these are all “Last Chance” races; the legislators elected in 2019 will be serving during the 2021 redistricting process. The state legislature draws district lines, and the governor has the power to veto district maps.

The state Senate is currently comprised of 19 Democrats and 21 Republicans, while the House of Delegates has 49 Democrats and 51 Republicans. Democrats have an incredible opportunity to flip both Virginia state legislature chambers in 2019.

Demographic shifts in Virginia favor Democrats. And a number of badly gerrymandered House districts have recently been fairly redrawn upon federal court order (subject to Supreme Court review). This should give Democrats an opportunity to compete fairly in a broader set of House districts this year.

2019 Executive Controversies

The current Governor, Lt. Governor and Attorney General are all Democrats, and none are up for election in 2019. However, each has been the subject of controversy in 2019. Governor Ralph Northam shocked the Commonwealth when photos surfaced of him in blackface during his years as a medical student. Lieutenant Governor Justin Fairfax seemed poised to transition into the Governor’s seat—until allegations of sexual assault in his past came to light. The third in line for the Governor’s seat, Attorney General Mark Herring, proactively admitted to dressing in blackface as a teenager himself. Ultimately, none of the men have resigned, despite calls to do so from numerous elected officials, organizations, and citizens groups.

At Sister District, these events have underscored the need to build a deep bench of diverse leaders and a strong Democratic majority in the state legislature. Without positive reinforcement from the Governor’s office this year, General Assembly candidates will certainly need our help.

THE DISTRICT

Virginia’s seventh state senate district is represented by Republican Senator Frank Wagner, who is not seeking reelection in 2019. As of the 2011 redistricting, a total of 199,020 civilians reside within Virginia’s seventh state senate district. Virginia state senators represent an average of 200,026 residents. After the 2000 Census, each member represented 176,963 residents.

ABOUT THE OPPONENT

Jennifer Kiggans (Republican) is a candidate seeking election to the Virginia State Senate to represent District 7. Kiggans is running in the general election on November 5, 2019, after advancing from the primary on June 11, 2019.

Jennifer Kiggans served in the U.S. Navy from 1994 to 2003. She earned a bachelor’s degree in international relations from Boston University in 1993, a B.S.N. in nursing from Old Dominion University in 2011, and an M.S.N. in nursing from Vanderbilt University in 2012. Kiggans’s career experience includes working as an adult-geriatric nurse practitioner beginning in 2012, serving as a naval aviator helicopter pilot from 1994 to 2003, and working as a Japan exchange English teacher from 1993 to 1994. She has been associated with American Geriatrics Society, Virginia Geriatrics Society, Virginia Council of Nurse Practitioners, American Association of Nurse Practitioners, American Nurses Association, The American Legion Post 110, and Republican Professionals Network.
